One of the delightful club events of autumn was the annual harvest dance of the Oriental club which took place last evening in American hall. The harvest season was suggested in the decorations. Corn shocks bordered the walls and several stood in the center of the floor. Pumpkins, jack-o'-lanterns and autumn foliage were also used profusely. One of the novel features was a quadrille executed by a number of old people who danced the quadrille years ago when it was at the height of its popularity. Another was the pumpkin dance in which each dancer was given a pumpkin head bearing a name affording the means by which partners were located. The Sperry orchestra played. A delicious supper was served in the middle of the evening.

DR. THOMSON'S EYE TALK

(TALK NO. 195.)

My Business.

My business is not always making glasses. It is to examine your eyes and tell you what you ought to do. It is to give you advice—honest advice. Almost every day I advise people to let glasses alone. I tell them that they will be of no benefit but a positive injury. I am here to sell glasses when they are needed but I will not sell them when they are not needed. If your eyes are troubling you in any way come in and talk about them. I have every convenience and appliance for testing the eyes thoroughly. If you will be benefited by glasses I will take the measure of your eyes and furnish you a correct fit at a reasonable charge. If not it will cost you nothing at all.

EASY METHODS FOR THE KITCHEN

Some Helpful Hints to Lighten the Drudgery of the Kitchen by Simple, Inexpensive Devices.

Does it seem that even at its best the washing of dishes is a monotonous, disagreeable task, which no amount of planning can alleviate? I do not wonder that and recalcitrant conditions such as this.

A housewife's aversion to this occupation may be wholly due to so small a matter as the height of her sink. I do not know why the average sink is designed for the very short woman, but it is so. To remedy this difficulty there are racks which can be bought to be placed under the dish pan to raise the latter to the desired height. If one is not obtainable, rest the pan on the kitchen table or some other support that will not necessitate your stooping over while the dish washing is in progress.

Again, an abundance of clean, hot water is essential. There is no excuse for greasy dirty water containing floating bits of food. Yet how many housekeepers, who pride themselves on their cleanliness, are guilty in this regard! The common laws of sanitation demand a reform.

Accessories. As to the accessories employed in dish washing, these could be close at hand. Besides a dishpan, drainer, and cloths, they should include a sink drainer, soap shaker, soap dish, washing powder, gritty cleanser of some sort, silver paste, and a supply of soda, commonly called washing soda. These may for the most part be conveniently placed on a shelf back of the sink.

The order in which the dishes are washed has considerable to do with the ease or lightness of the burden. Why not appreciably lessen it by attacking the hardest things first? To be specific, I would recommend first the cleansing of pots, pans, and kettles, which commonly come under the general head of "rough" dishes. Now these are apt to be quite obstinate, as every housewife knows. The gritty cleanser may be effective in some cases, but the very best treatment I have yet discovered for removing the sticky, hardened substances from frying pans and similar utensils is to sprinkle them with washing powder, cover the bottom with cold water, and allow them to simmer on the top of the stove. They will take care of themselves while the table is being cleared and the food put away. If some dish still refuses to yield to this means of loosening the residue, no matter, it is well after the remainder of the dishes are out of the way, to allow it to soak in a soapy solution of washing soda for a time.

Cooking Utensils. Next to the cooking utensils come the silver and glass. A clean dish cloth and immaculate towel are requisite for this part of the task. If an occasional piece of silver is found to be badly discolored, or ill suited to time to clean it immediately rather than put it away soiled, for it will have to be taken out and cleaned in any case before it can be used again.

Only the china is now left, and the care of this is scarcely any work at all if the housekeeper will let it drain itself without the use of a towel. I have seen housewives looking askance at the adoption of this hotel method in the home, but far from being a slipshod way of evading dish drying, it is the only true sanitary one. One of the most efficient housekeeping appliances I possess is a portable dish rack of galvanized wire with a row of supports running lengthwise through the center for holding the dishes upright. It has repaid its nominal cost—quarter—many times over. It must be understood that if the dishes are to dry themselves they must be first carefully washed and thoroughly rinsed after wash.

After the sink is washed (with a cloth served especially for that purpose), all towels and cloths that have played a part in the dish washing process should be cleaned and hung out of doors to dry.

Protection Against Bronchitis and Pneumonia

A Recipe. Into a pitcher put a tablespoonful of butter, one-quarter cup light brown sugar, an ounce of fresh, whole allspice and a pint of Duffy's pure malt whiskey. Let it stand for half an hour; then add one-half pint boiling water. Let it stand again for a short while, and before serving stir well and add the juice of one orange and one lemon. This is to be served in a wine glass.

It is very wholesome, appetizing and strengthening, especially for fever and chills in stormy and blustering weather. Prompt action on such occasions will ward off many a serious and oft-times fatal attack of bronchitis and pneumonia, as well as irritating coughs and colds.
